

used by chemist, platinum wire and gold and platinum sheets, of estimated total value of $6,000. There were between them three boxes of chemicals. One contained acetonite, Mr. Artbuckle said was worth $60, and another two ounces of chloride of gold, worth $17.50.

Mr. Artbuckle was frank and taciturn alternately. He told the detectives he lived at 164 Grand avenue, Milwaukee, and was employed by and a partner in the Novelty Dye Company, 110 Grand avenue at Grand and Michigan avenues, Milwaukee. He had sold thirty-two ounces of platinum in all, he said, and insisted it was a waste of time to follow him.

William Osterreich, president of the Novelty Dye Company and an authority on the manufacture of dyek, described Artbuckle as a "wizened fellow, a wizard with chemicals."

He was shown samples of dyes by Henry Vulcuse of Chicago a few months ago, he said. The samples were as fine as the water. He said he had told Mr. Vulcuse where the samples originated and was told a boy had made them.

An interview was arranged, and Mr. Artbuckle was shown to the office of the detective. He said he was sure if he could make more of the same dye before his eyes he would give him $10,000 a year salary and $10,000 bonus when he had superintended the manufacture of the dye. He owned one-third of the stock in a company he would organize to push the product. He says the young chemist passed the tests.

Artbuckle is said to be an orphan whose guardian is a Chicago priest.

[illegible]

An interview was arranged, and the steamer Helene was towed to the pier. Osterlieh said he told Abuttin that he would give him the same day before his eyes, but would give him five minutes to get ready. He said he was surprised when he had supervised the hanging of the man, because he was a white man, and he had a weight of 250 pounds, besides one-third of the stock in a company in New York. He said he was surprised when the young chemist passed the gallows, because he was a white man, and he was a chemist.

Abuttin said he was a white man, and he was a chemist. He said he was a white man, and he was a chemist.

Steamer Helene Sunk.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—Lloyd's dispatches from the steamer Helene, which was sunk off the coast of Norway, said that the steamer was lost, but that the crew was saved.

The steamer Helene mentioned in the dispatches was a small steamer, and was registered in 1798. The steamer was built in 1798, and was built in 1798.

can Promptly at 2:30

can Art Galleries

THE SOUTH, NEW YORK
ing Sessions of Famous
Palace Collection
the Sale includes Fourteenth Century Majol-culptures in Stucco
and Arms and Armor.
to $10 to $85 inclusive
9 A. M. UNTIL 6 P. M. and Choice Collection of
and American China
ington Ware, Pewter & Copper
the Connoisseur
ck J. Williamson

The Afternoons of Dec. 4, 5, 6, 7 & 8.
 mailed on receipt of Fifty Cents
 will be conducted by MAS E. KIRBY
 of Mr. Otto Bernot, of the ASSOCIATION, Managers
 100 E. 23d Street, New York.

Assortments of Slippers

made of styles calculated an who desires his home
a individuality and good

Check there are Slippers at $2.50 to $15.00 per pair.
(Department, First Floor)

Manne, New York

Hamlin
ANOS

measured by old standards.
development of new possibilities ability, they form a class by the most beautiful, and prized pianos in the

they are necessarily the ce, and demonstrably
ment.

HAMLIN CO.
venue, at 52nd Street
ALLOWANCES FOR OTHER PIANOS